All graduating high school students of Japanese heritage as well as family and community members are invited to this annual event. Lisa talked about her choices and how Japanese cultural values had shaped her behavior and the way she views the world. She challenged the graduates to pay attention to their values and by staying true to those values; they will find their own path. Congratulations, Class of 2011

By Sharon Takahashi

The 64th Japanese American Community Graduation Banquet was held at the Multnomah Athletic Club on Sunday, May 1, 2011. Though more than a month “premature,” twenty graduates were honored by those in attendance as they begin the next chapter of their life’s journey.

This annual affair is sponsored by the Buddhist Daihonzan Henjyoji Temple, Epworth United Methodist Church, Gresham-Troutdale JACL, Japanese Ancestral Society, Nichiren Buddhist Temple, Nikkei Fujinkai, Oregon Buddhist Temple, Oregon Nisei Veterans, Inc., Portland JACL and the Veleda Club. Shokookai of Portland, a group of Japanese companies, also participates as a scholarship donor. This year’s chairing organization was Gresham Troutdale JACL.

The planning committee selected Lisa Hoashi, the Hideo Naito scholarship winner in 1997, to deliver the keynote. Lisa graduated from New York University in (Continued on next page)

2001 and is now working for Mercy Corps, the Portland based agency at the forefront of many humanitarian relief efforts. Her responsibilities as the Public Information Officer for Haiti have broadened with the recent earthquake/tsunami/nuclear disaster to include fundraising and relief efforts in Japan.

Though I sat at a back table, I noticed how so many were mesmerized by what she had to say. She held the audience in the palm of her hand as she told them how proud she was to be involved in the Haitian relief effort, though it seemed daunting at first, and she knew she had found her dream job—helping others. As the media focused on Japan's crisis and praised the dignity, respect and stoicism the Japanese exhibited to the rest of the world, she was proud that this was her heritage, too. Modestly, she said she felt she had achieved her position because her superiors felt she worked well with others and was well disciplined. She knows that that work ethic and perseverance will be seen as Japan recovers and rebuilds.

Lisa Hoashi’s address was a gift for all of us. She exudes pride in her roots, her career choice and achievements, makes time for her avocations (yes, she is also an accomplished writer of fiction) and radiates enthusiasm.

A big thank you goes out to the organizations, scholarship sponsors and individuals who work to keep this tradition going. Special thanks to Kay Endo for the group photograph which all graduates receive as a memento and to Chip Larouche who captures award winners and their sponsors for our community history.

Vincent Who? What does it mean to you?

By Susan Leedham

The makers of this moving, inspiring film went to a college campus and asked Asian students if they knew who Vincent Chin was. Nobody knew.

Vincent Chin was a Chinese immigrant who was brutally murdered in 1982 in Detroit, Michigan. Two laid-off white autoworkers beat Vincent Chin with a baseball bat, believing him to be a Japanese autoworker and thus responsible for taking away their jobs when Hondas and Toyotas were outselling US-made cars.

The two men were arrested and went before a judge, and, shockingly, the judge found them guilty of manslaughter and not murder because Vincent Chin died five days later. They received a $3,000 fine and three years’ probation. After protests throughout the country, the men were re-tried. One was found not guilty, and one was let off on a technicality. No jail time was served.

But the point of the film was to show how this injustice was a call to action, uniting not only the Chinese community but other Asians and people of color. It was clear that the judge found that a Chinese man’s life was not as valuable as a white man’s life. That begs the question, how much is a Japanese man’s life worth or that of a Korean man or a Mexican man? Unfortunately, we know how poorly our black population has fared in our justice system.

The film focused on how young people, after learning of Vincent Chin’s tragic story, were so moved that they are now community organizers and activists and speaking out for all of us.

After the film, we had an excellent panel featuring Hyoek Kim, commission member of the White House Initiative on Asian and Pacific Islander Affairs; Wajdi Said, president and co-founder of the Muslim Education Trust; and Joseph Santos-Lyons, coordinator for the Asian Pacific American Network of Oregon aka APANO.

Helen Ying did a wonderful job as moderator leading the discussion on the meaning of the film, racism (Continued on next page) today and what we can do. All of the panelists were very articulate, and each had a story to tell and a fresh perspective.

This was a collaborative effort. Many thanks to the University of Oregon for providing the wonderful space in the White Stag Building, Art de Cuisine for excellent food, The Duck Store for providing coffee, and the sponsoring organizations: CACA Portland Lodge, APANO, and Portland JACL.

Comments from Oregon Nikkei Endowment (O.N.E.)

Congratulations to our Executive Director, Mari Watanabe, for her appointment to the Commission on Asian Affairs by Oregon Governor Kitzhaber and confirmed by the Oregon Senate. For Asian Americans in Oregon, the Commission advocates for the development of economic, social, political and educational opportunities; identifies and examines their needs; develops and sponsors programs to inform them of available services and resources. The Commission also supports the Economic and Community Development Department’s efforts to promote trade, tourism and economic development between Oregon, the United States and Pacific Rim countries. This is a voluntary position.
