On June 14, Flag Day, I joined family and friends as 54 people took the Oath of Allegiance and became naturalized American citizens. There were smiles, some tears, and great pride as they held up their certificates for family photos. I was there with four other volunteers from the New American Voter Project (NAVP) to congratulate these new citizens and help them register to vote. The NAVP began in 2012 under the leadership of then Secretary of State Kate Brown, USCIS Portland Filed Office Director Evelyn Sahli, and the Asian Pacific American Network of Oregon (APANO). The Project won the Medallion Award from the National Association of Secretaries of State in 2013 and serves as a model for other states. On September 21, 2015, NAVP reached an impressive milestone of collecting 15,000 voter registrations.

At present Oregon Voice coordinates the program with volunteers from APANO, CAUSA, and Unite Oregon (formerly Center for Intercultural Organizing and Oregon Action). Oregon Voice is a network of community and advocacy organizations which serve traditionally underrepresented communities. Its role is to provide shared resources, technology and support to enable organizations to have a stronger political impact.

Setsy Larouche, Portland JACL Board member and Membership Chair, regularly volunteers with NAVP. She says, “Each time I watch the new immigrants take their oath of citizenship, it brings back many fond memories when I too became a U.S. citizen, and what a perfect time to sign up people to vote since it’s one of the greatest privileges of citizenship.”

It truly is a rewarding experience for volunteers and our newest Americans. One woman I helped on Flag Day was there with her daughter. She was so happy to finally be a citizen and be able to vote. She told me that she had never voted in her life and was so excited to have that opportunity.

It is a great reminder during this election year that our right to vote should never be taken for granted. I’ve been a registered voter since I was eighteen years old and have voted in every election since. I remember walking to the polling place with my parents and watching them go inside the voting booth. Years later my husband and I took ours sons to cast our ballots. Now that we live in Oregon and vote by mail, it is even easier to participate in our democracy and vote.

NAVP is looking for more volunteers. If you want more information or are interested and can commit to at least two hours a month, please contact Dean Price, dean@oregonvoice.org.

NICHIREN BUDDHIST TEMPLE OF PORTLAND

NEW TELEPHONE NUMBER: 503-235-8292
We are still trying to find the owners of a Zenith radio that was left behind in 1942 when a family of Japanese descent was relocated to an incarceration camp during World War II.

The Zenith radio has been restored by Blake Dietze of the NWVRS Antique Radio Society here in Portland. We do know that Will Barnett obtained the radio from the elderly man living at 109 NE Liberty Avenue, formerly Liberty Street for $7.00 in 1989/1990.

The elderly gentlemen obtained the radio from a neighbor before being relocated to an incarceration camp. Research so far shows that no family of Japanese descent ever lived on Liberty Avenue.

What we don’t know is if the family of Japanese descent lived further away, or if the elderly gentlemen lived elsewhere in 1942. If that is the case, we can research the last name of the person who lived there in 1942 and then trace the name back to find any surviving family members or perhaps where they lived in 1942 if not on Liberty Street. All of this information is a recent development since the research on Liberty Street came to a dead end.

Sharon Nesbit, a reporter for the Gresham Outlook newspaper, did extensive research and wrote an article. Marilyn Deutsch from KPTV Fox 12, has interviewed several parties involved with the search and plans to air a segment in the near future.

If you can share this information with others, it would be greatly appreciated. Please contact me for any further information and please send any comments or corrections in case I have distorted any facts.

Pat Kagi, (360) 909-7009

A Japanese Family in Gresham gave this radio away in 1942. Radio conservationists are looking for them and want to give it back.

SCHOLARSHIP ESSAY

As part of the 69th Annual Japanese American Community Graduation Banquet held in May, students were asked by the Scholarship Committee to write an essay. We will feature these essays here, through September.

Taylor Ishida, Grant High School

Growing up, I believed being a part of the Nikkei community implied eating Yakisoba out of small white paper boxes at Bazaars in church basements, or dancing at the Obon with my kimono dragging along the hot cement, and the fervent beat of the taiko drum resonating throughout my entire body. It also meant listening to my grandmother’s stories of the extremely limited memories she had from her time at Minidoka (she was only two-years-old when Executive Order 9066 was issued). However, despite my constant exposure to the Japanese American community, it wasn’t until my junior year in high school that I began working with the community.

My involvement began when I set out to write a story about two alumni of my high school, who had been interned as very young children, for my high school’s news publication, Grant Magazine. I began by interviewing the two alumni, Shirley Kanada and Joni Kimoto, both of whom were incarcerated in the Portland Assembly Center and eventually Minidoka Internment Camp. Eventually I decided to pay a visit to the Oregon Nikkei Legacy Center to find more historical information on the Japanese Internment. There, I met Todd Mayberry, Director of Collections at the museum who walked me through the entire experience of Portland Japanese Americans during the time of World War II. That visit, along with the powerful interviews I had with not only Shirley and Joni, but also other Nikkei who had survived the internment, helped me realize the importance of preserving history, so we can learn from our mistakes of the past, and appreciate the bravery and ability to endure of our predecessors.

In December, I was given the opportunity to present research I had been conducting over the past seven months through the Legacy Center, at an event called “Letters from Beyond the Fence.” The research was on two letter that Ida Nakamura, who was interned as a high schooler, had sent to her classmates at Parkrose High School from behind the iron gates of Minidoka. My research involved interviewing her family members, and tracing her experiences specifically leading up to the internment. Prior to this experience, for the most part I had only heard in depth internment stories of young children and their parents, which is why I feel I connected with Ida particularly, because she was the same age as me when she and her family were forced to evacuate their homes and settle into the Portland Assembly Center. In fact, our birthdays were only one day apart.

While I haven’t always been able to recognize it, the Japanese American experience and community has shaped my life by providing three traits to strive to embody. The first, is resilience, something I have learned from not only the ability to endure from all Japanese who were incarcerated, but also the bravery of my grandmother, who immigrated to the United States from China, to provide my mother and her five siblings with better opportunities. Second, is hard work, a trait my parents have certainly emphasized, coupled with determination and a dash of stubbornness. And last, the ability to be observant and to willingly provide welcoming ears is a trait I have come to appreciate especially, from the entire Japanese American community.
