An Injustice to One is an Injustice to All

Board Member Message by Jean Yamamoto

Earlier this year we reported to our members that the Portland JACL Board signed on to a bill introduced in the Oregon House to end profiling by law enforcement. House Bill 2002 has a clear path to passage in this session with enough votes in the House and Senate. HB 2002 does three things:

1. Directs law enforcement agencies to develop written policies and procedures prohibiting profiling, by October 1, 2015
2. Authorizes collection of profiling complaints from the public
3. Establishes a workgroup charged with providing accountability recommendations and reporting next year to the Legislature

Perhaps law enforcement profiling is not something you think about on a daily basis or even consider at all. Of the hundreds of bills that are introduced each legislative session, Portland JACL took a position on this one to stand in solidarity with other minorities who are unfairly profiled just as our Japanese community was profiled many years ago.

Years ago I attended a Portland Human Rights Commission roundtable at which an earnest young white woman urged attendees to send youths to a

"Know your Rights" workshop so they will be equipped in case of a law enforcement stop. That is when I learned about "The Talk" and that people of privilege can't even imagine the disparate treatment others face. The thinking may be that surely one must have done something wrong to be stopped by the police and can be expected to be treated respectfully and professionally. Unfortunately that is not the shared experience of blacks, Latinos, immigrants, LGBTQ, people with mental illness or homeless.

Jo Ann Hardesty, President of the Portland NAACP, testified in a House hearing about "The Talk" African American mothers have with their young sons. The Talk goes like this:

"No son, this isn't the birds-n-bees talk. This is about you coming home alive. We know you're just a child but to some people you're an adult. An adult who's dangerous and guilty of something even if you've done nothing wrong. So, if a policeman stops you... for any reason...just do what he says. Don't pull out your phone to call us. Even if he yells at you or pulls his gun and you get scared, do not run. Just put your hands in the air. No, this isn't right but we don't have the luxury of being right. We want you home alive."

bias exists and HB 2002 will collect the data to support this common knowledge so that issues can be addressed.

The next challenge is to actually use the law and report cases of police profiling. The Law Enforcement Contacts Policy and Data Review Committee (LECC) was chosen to collect complaints which may be made anonymously. LECC is an independent committee housed at Portland State University's Criminal Justice Policy Research Institute and has no connection to law enforcement other than data collection. LECC also provides free trainings to law enforcement about cultural sensitivity and bias. In addition to tracking public complaints, LECC will also collect data from law enforcement agencies on traffic stops and violations. The reporting by agencies is voluntary due to budget concerns but hopefully over time they will see the value of the bill and will participate to further build trust and provide better policing.

Finally, the 9-member task force will be meeting in the summer and fall to develop an accountability structure for the bill. Their recommendations will inform the legislature on establishing a process for identifying patterns or practices of profiling and existing biased policies and how to address these practices and policies. The task force members will be selected by the Governor, the House Speaker, and the Senate President and are already going through the application and vetting process. All meetings of the task force will be public and they intend to hold meetings around the state in order to allow input from various communities to be heard. If you are interested in following the progress of this task force the Center for Intercultural Organizing (CIO) will be continuing to monitor its efforts and will be posting information on its website, www.Interculturalorganizing.org.

Congratulations Mariko!

Mariko Locke, a member of Unite People, the Portland JACL youth group and a 9th grader at Dominus Lux of Happy Valley, Oregon, was nominated to attend the Congress of Future Science and Technology Leaders in Boston, MA which was held on June 28-30. The Congress is an honors-only program for high school students who are passionate about science, technology, engineering or mathematics (STEM). Mariko was nominated by American hero and astronaut Buzz Aldrin, Science Director of the National Academy of Future Scientists and Technologists to represent Dominus Lux based on her academic achievement, leadership potential and passion for science and technology. Portland JACL congratulates Mariko and wishes her continued success with high school and beyond!
